SHIELD G-MAN CLUB

BULLETIN NO. 21

HI'YA, GANG!

Boy, I asked for quick action on our new Pen Pal Code Club and I sure got it. Dusty and I have been working like horses going through all the letters that have poured in. Right now, we're still working at it. So, much as I hate to do it, I'll have to wait until our next get-together to give you more complete results.

Before I sign off, I've got a letter here that isn't really official G-Man business, but it's such a swell letter, such a swell thought and such a patriotic gesture that I'm making it official Shield G-Man business and I think you'll agree with me when I tell you what it's about. It's from one of our members, Tony Marudis, of Brooklyn, New York, who just was left $10,000 by his late grandfather, and what do you think Tommy is doing with his money? Half of it is going into war bonds and the other half to the Red Cross. Congratulations, Tommy! Your grandfather would be mighty proud of you if he could know what you're doing. But no prouder than we are, every last member of the Shield G-Man Club. Keep punching, Tommy!

Sincerely,

Joe Higgins (The Shield)

By HAL SHALLET

AL DODGER twirled his glass of beer, and smiled inwardly. This town was sure a sweet little hide-out. None of the fool hicks suspected he was wanted in seven states for various criminal activities. He wondered what they would say if they knew he had pulled off that bank job three hundred miles away.

Someone stopped by Al's table saying, "Howdy, Mr. Dodger," and Al looked up with a little start to recognize Silas Jones. He had met this hay-seed a couple of times in the little grocery store across the street from the hotel. Al Dodger smiled, nodded, and Jones passed to the booth directly in back of him. Al had seen Sheriff Lem Brown sitting in that booth as he had come into the Hotel Bar.

And Al couldn't help himself, he had to grin wide. Why the bunch of suckers. To think that he had even made friends with Lem Brown the sheriff. It made him want to hust out laughing everytime he thought of how he and the Sheriff had discussed the very bank job Al had pulled!

And then through his amused thoughts, he heard the murmur of voices in the booth behind him. He leaned back, listened, and heard Silas Jones' high-pitched voice raised in anger.

"I'll do no such thing!" A fist thumped down on a table. "Ain't talked to a Martin nigh on fifteen years. Ain't no good yore askin' me to put up m'money in that there Martin Bank. I ain't aimin' to put it in no bank. Ain't done it before, and don't aies startin' to now."

"But Si, it ain't asfe what yore doin'. You live in that lonesome ole house, miles away from any livin' soul. Ain't you worried that some thief'll up and hepp himself to all you got?"

"Now you looky here, Lem, I don't want t'hear no more about it! I got myself as much protection as I need! I got me a contraption rigged up is sure fire against all comers! I ain't sceered, and ain't worried. So I'll thank ye to keep yors nose outta mah business!"

During all this Al Dodger's eyes developed a glitter. His sexless mouth slid into a grim half-smile. He knew exactly where Silas Jones lived, for he had passed by there not more than two days ago. The house was way over in the hills, a secluded, deserted, lonely area.

It might be worth while finding out just how much money the old bird had!

Al slid out of his booth, paid for his beer, and slowly walked out of the Hotel Bar.

So! Silas Jones had a "contraption" had he! Sure-fire protection against all comers! Not only did Silas Jones' money interest Al Dodger, but to find out just exactly what that contraption was aroused his curiosity, too.

He walked around to the Hotel Garage, and took out his car. It was early evening, and Al drove leisurely over the fast darkening country roads.

When he came to Silas Jones' neighborhood, about three hundred or more yards from the house, he pulled the car up along the side of the road, parked the car. He got out, went to the door, lifted it. Then he sat down on the running board, fired a cigaretta and waited.

A job like this didn't even take much planning. It was as simple as casing a joint. Simpler.

In no time at all he spotted a blitz of light through the trees, which told him a car was coming toward him. Presently the labour-ed chuga chuga of Silas Jones' dilapidated Ford was audible.

Al sprang up, took up a wrench and flashlight, buried his head under the hood, and noisily began to tinker around.

As he had expected, Silas Jones stopped the car just abreast of him. Al looked up as if he had been unaware of Jones' approach and put a startled expression on his face.

"Why . . . Oh, hello! It's you Mr. Jones."

Silas squinted down at him. "Now what in tarnation you doin' out here, Mr. Dodger?"

Al chuckled disarmingly. "Motor trouble. My car stalled. Guess I must have taken the wrong road, or something. Not quite used to these country roads. Thought I'd take a little drive." He thumbed back to his car. "That danged thing simply won't budge any more!"

"I say, have you a phone in your house? I'd like to call up the garage in town and have them send me a tow car."

"Why sure." Jones leaned over opened the door. "Hop in. You welcome to use m'phone."

Al climbed in, and the car slid forward, then chugged merrily on its way to the Jones' house. Jones chatted amiably all the way there.

They stopped in front of the big house. Al got out and followed Silas Jones up the wooden front porch steps. Their footfalls vibrated hollowly over the boards of porch.

And then to Al's amazement Silas did an unusal thing.

In front of the door, he took out a key, and placed it in the lock. After the door was unlocked he opened it slowly, just a few inches. There was just room enough to slide his hand through the open crack. He reached in fumbled around for a moment, then with a "There!" He brought his hand back, straightened, and flung the door wide open.

Silas stepped in, turned on the switch, and the room flooded with light. Al jumped back with a choked cry.

He was looking straight into the muzzle of a shotgun!

Then it was that Al understood, and he got his breath back. This then was the "contraption" Silas Jones had referred to.

A smile twisted into Al's mouth again. He stepped forward, made a wide semi-circle around that shotgun, merely to impress Silas, while his face wore a mock expression of fear.

Silas had to cackle again. "That's m'burglar contraption," he confided. "And don't you go tellin' 'round what 'tis!"

If that wasn't just the sort of dumb trick a hick would pull, Al thought contemptuously, as he regarded that shotgun.

The gun was securely set in pegs in the wall, while the butt was about a foot and a half out from the wall. The muzzle was pointed directly to the door. A stout cord was knotted about the trigger, and ran through metal eyes to the butt, then forward to the wall, where a loop dangled. This loop evidently fitted over the knob of the door. With the loop in place, if the door should open, the string would tighten, until it pulled at the trigger, and discharge the gun.

Not bad, Al decided, but not so hot either. It was an ancient trick he had heard of, but never seen in use.

"Mighty clever idea," Al said to Silas, "but what about your windows? As I understand it, burglars are more apt to come in by a window, than by a door."

"No thief'll git inta mah windows!" Silas said emphatically. "Got me a 'lectrical invention rigged in every window in mah house. Should you as much touch yore hand up to the window, it'll send a charge of 'lectric through you which'll knock you cold. It also starts the alarm workin', and I sleep with m'Winchester handy! No sir. This house is burglar proof!"

Al's eyes hidded, and danger lights fired their cores.

He quietly lifted the gun out of his pocket.

Jones turned in surprise; then his eyes fell on the gun Al held steadily in his hand.

Silas gave off a thin cry, and took a step forward. Al's hand squeezed tight over the gun. The gun sneezed hoarsely, spat fire.

Al looked down at the body of the dead man coldly. He absently lifted the gun to his hips, calmly blew down the barrel. He watched the river of blood grow out from under the dead man, saw it spread across the floor boards.

A sucker never deserves an even break, Al thought and slipped the gun back into his pocket. Then he turned around to look for the possible hiding place of the money. He was in no hurry. He'd rip the place apart, if need be.

In the next room he found an old-fashioned roll-top desk. In the bottom drawer he found the black suitcase. He took it out, put it on the desk, and snapped open the hinges.

With an upsurging lift of excitement, he beheld the mass of green bills. Hastily he shuffled through the money, roughly estimated that there must be close to fifty thousand dollars there! Unmarked bills! What a sweet little haul!

His eyes glittered feverishly as he snapped the bag shut. He lifted it from the desk, and went back into the living room.

He tipped his forehead with his fingers to Silas Jones.

"So long Sucker, and thanks a million!"

He crossed the living room, and came toward the door. His eyes fell on that "contraption" again and he chuckled, thinking how useless that thing had been for a smart guy like himself.

He regarded the shotgun that hung there looking stupidly ridiculous and foolishly proud.

What a same the thing had not worked. Farmer Jones had placed such complete faith in the thing too. And it had failed him. What a shame!

Failed, thought Al? And through his mind there came an idea for a practical use for it.

He would set that thing up again. Who would be the first to come through that door? A neighbor? Perhaps even . . . yes? The Sheriff! He'd come looking for the missing Silas Jones. What sweet irony, to think of the Sheriff with his top blown off. Perhaps, if he went back to town, he could get the Sheriff to come up here in some way. What a sweet welcoming committee!

He opened the door, stepped out on the porch, put down the suitcase, and went to work. He reached in, fumbled for the cord, found it, and hooked the loop very carefully around the door knob. This done, he slipped out his hand, and cautiously began to shut the door.

He did not wish to shut it entirely, for the next visitor to the Jones' house, must find the door slightly ajar, and not try to gain entrance to the house through the windows.

And just as he was doing that, he stiffened. Every muscle in his body wound up tight, while a chill passed through his body.

Close by he heard footsteps, the crunch of gravel under feet! He had been so preoccupied he had not stopped to listen. It had never occurred to him that someone would come so soon!

He spun around, and with a sharp stab of terror, saw that a man was coming toward him, already gaining the bottom of the steps. He instantly recognized the Sheriff, Lem Brown!

Panic-stricken, his eyes darted around for a means of escape. The sheriff now froze to a dead halt, for he had seen the crouching figure. His hand reached for his holster. It all so startled Al, that he inadvertently took one step back against the door. . . .

CAPTAIN COMMANDO and the BOY SOLDIERS
WHO ARE CAPTAIN COMMANDO AND THE BOY SOLDIERS? WHAT HAVE THEIR PAST LIVES BEEN LIKE BEFORE THEY BECAME THE ENGINES OF DESTRUCTION THEY ARE? THIS IS A TALE THAT WILL ANSWER THOSE QUESTIONS!! by IRV NOVICK

AS OUR STORY OPENS, A COMMANDO UNIT IS BEING TRANSPORTED TO ENEMY SOIL ON A MISSION HAZARDOUS AS ANY THEY HAVE EVER UNDERTAKEN!
NOW REMEMBER YOUR INSTRUCTIONS WHEN WE 'CHUTE BEHIND THE ENEMY LINES!
WOW! CAP, LOOK! A FLOCK OF NAZI FIGHTER PLANES!
OUTNUMBERED AND OUT-MANEUVERED THE BOMBING TRANSPORTS BATTLE HEROICALLY TO WARD OFF THE FOE---

CAPTAIN COMMANDO'S SHIP IS HIT BY A BURST OF CANNONFIRE FROM A MESSERSCHMITT--- WE'RE ON FIRE! BAIL OUT!
HURRY IT UP, FLATBUSH!
QUIT SHOVIN', IDIOT! YA DON'T GET NO RAIN-CHECK ON DIS, YA KNOW!
JUST AS BILLY PREPARES TO JUMP, NAZI BULLETS FIND THEIR MARK IN HIS CHUTE!
OFF WITH IT! QUICK, LAD! YOU AND I WILL HAVE TO DOUBLE UP!

LOOK, HANS! CLAY DUCKS!
JA! I THINK VE PLAY MIT DEM A VHILE BEFORE VE SHOOT DEM DOWN!
THE BEASTLY COWARDS! THEY'RE GOING TO 'GUN US!
IT'S COLD-BLOODED MURDER!
AND IN THE BRIEF MOMENT LEFT TO HIM, CAPTAIN COMMANDO'S MIND RACES INTO THE PAST!
AND HE RELIVES AN EPISODE IN HIS LIFE--AN EPISODE ETCHED INDELIBLY IN HIS BRAIN!
THIS LOOKS LIKE THE FINISH! WE HAVEN'T GOT A CHANCE!
DAD! LOOKS LIKE OUR COUNTRY'S HEADED FOR THE WAR!
NO USE WORRYING ABOUT IT, BILLY! IT'S NO CONCERN OF MINE!
MY TAILOR GIVES ME ENOUGH TROUBLE, CONFOUND HIM! I DISTINCTLY TOLD HIM I WANTED NO PADDING ON THE SHOULDER!
MY OWN SON, ASHAMED OF ME! THINKS I'M AN EMPTY-HEADED PLAYBOY! IF ONLY I COULD TELL HIM THE TRUTH!
I TELL YOU, OLD MAN, YOU CHAPS ARE NEXT ON THAT, BLIGHTER, HITLER'S LIST!
YES! I SUPPOSE THAT IS MORE IMPORTANT, DAD!
NONSENSE! WE AMERICANS ARE TOO FAR AWAY!

COMPLACENCY! THAT'S OUR GREATEST FOE! (SNIFF, SNIFF) WHAT'S THAT? SMELLS LIKE SMOKE!
A FIRE! AND BILLY IS UPSTAIRS! HE'LL BE TRAPPED!
PASSED OUT! I DIDN'T GET HERE A SECOND TOO SOON!
MY SON! MY SON! IF ONLY I COULD TELL YOU I'M A SECRET SERVICE OPERATIVE FOR THE U. S. GOVERNMENT!
IF ONLY I COULD--WHA--WHAT AM I SAYING-- I--I MUST HAVE BEEN DAY DREAMING!
DON'T WORRY, DAD! YOU HAVEN'T SAID ANYTHING I DIDN'T KNOW!
YOU SEE! I WASN'T COMPLETELY UNCONSCIOUS THAT NIGHT-- AND I HEARD WHAT YOU SAID!
YOU-YOU MEAN YOU NEVER WERE ASHAMED OF ME!
ASHAMED! YOU DON'T KNOW HOW PROUD I'VE BEEN OF THE SWELLEST BRAVEST FATHER IN THE WHOLE WORLD! AND HOW PROUD I AM TO DIE WITH YOU THIS WAY!

ON "THAT" SAME BRIEF MOMENT PERCY'S THOUGHTS ARE ALSO WINGS SOARING INTO THE PAST!
YOU AWSK ME WOT I THINKS, MASTER PERCIVAL? I THINK YOU'RE THE LUCKIEST LAD IN ALL ENGLAND, BLIMEY!
I THOUGHT YOU'D SAY THAT THORNDYKE! AFTER ALL I AM THE SON OF THE EARL OF LOTHAR, RICHEST MAN IN ALL ENGLAND!
BUT I'D TRADE IT ALL FOR--THORN-DYKE, STOP THE CAR!
I SAY THERE, OLD MAN! THAT'S A RATHER SMALLISH CHAP YOU'RE HITTING!
AND WHO'S THE BLOKE WOT'S GONNA STOP ME!
MAYBE YOU, YA BLEEDIN' TOFF!
I SHOULDN'T BE SURPRISED!
BLAM

AND HOW DID YOU ENJOY YOUR MORNING CONSTITUTIONAL, PERCIVAL?
SPLENDID, PATER! I HAD A MOST ROUS-ING FISTICUFF ENGAGEMENT!

VERY NICE! I--UH-- SPLAT--DID YOU SAY YOU WERE FIGHTING?
WHY YES--AND A DEUCED GOOD LESSON I TAUGHT THAT BULLY, TOO! IT WAS A HIGHLY ENJOYABLE EXPERIENCE!
NOW SEE HERE PERCIVAL, I WON'T HAVE YOU BRAWLING LIKE A COMMON STREET LOUT, DASH IT!
BUT-- BUT-- PATER!
WHERE IS YOUR BREEDING? WE LOTHARS JUST DON'T DO THAT SORT OF THING! FIGHTING! UGH!
YOUR LORDSHIP, LOOK!
MY WORD!
WAR DECLARED
HOW BEASTLY! HOWEVER I DON'T SUPPOSE THERE'S ANYTHING YOU COULD DO ABOUT IT! FIGHTING'S NOT THE LOTHAR TRADITION, IS IT?
I--UH-- DON'T KNOW ABOUT THAT!
BUT-- BUT YOU JUST SAID--
NEVER MIND WHAT I JUST SAID! THIS IS DIFFERENT! I'M ENLIGHTING RIGHT NOW! YOU'LL HAVE TO LOOK AFTER THINGS M'LAD!
THE HUNS GOT TO YOU PATER! JUST AS THEY'RE GOING TO GET TO ME! BUT WE LOTHARS ARE FIGHTERS AFTER ALL, AREN'T WE?
